To Whom It May Concern:

I am writing to say thank you for leading the way as a compassionate organization and for conducting your research without engaging in cruel and unnecessary animal testing or vivisection. It is very important to me how research is carried out and how products are developed and tested. I only support organizations whose research is not tested on animals.

In an age with advancing technologies and an ever-increasing understanding of human anatomy and physiology, it is time to stop barbaric, outdated testing on animals. This type of research causes an inconceivable amount of suffering and is unnecessary. So again, I thank you for not partaking in such out-dated and inhumane practices and for utilizing more modern, non-animal alternatives.

I will continue to support (insert Charity Name), and I will encourage my friends, family, and colleagues to also support (Charity Name). Thank you for conducting your research ethically and morally and making a difference in the world through cruelty-free practices. I am glad there is an organization that I can feel good about supporting. Thank you.

Sincerely,

Every single day more than 38,000 animals are used to test cosmetics, toiletries like toothpaste and shampoo, and household detergents and cleaners. The most common test is called the Draize test where products are put directly into the animals' eyes and technicians record the effects. The "Lethal Dose" test measures the amount of a product it takes to kill part of a group of animals forced to eat it. THESE TESTS ARE NOT REQUIRED BY LAW, but some companies continue to use them to protect themselves from future lawsuits.
